

Project Manager
Neptune Bulk Terminals (Canada) Ltd.
Vancouver, British Columbia

The demand for raw materials and resources has never been higher and Neptune Terminals is thriving as the largest multi-product bulk terminal operator in North America. Located in North Vancouver, Neptune operates three berths across 71 acres handling nearly 11 million tons of coal, potash and other agriculture product annually. In addition to the operating capability, Neptune is committed to its people, community and the environment. Neptune's unionized workforce and management staff numbers over 260 people. Environmentally, Neptune has spent several million dollars on "state of the art" environmental systems since 1981 that will allow the Terminal to operate sensitively and sustainably into the future. The company is a consortium organization whose majority shareholders include Canpotex Bulk Terminals, Teck Coal Partnership, and Bunge Canada.

As the result of continued growth, there now exists a new opportunity for a Project Manager to help lead the execution of a $70 million capital expansion project that will enhance the Terminal's in-bound operations capability. The Project Manager will join the management team of this well-respected and progressive organization and provide leadership and vision to all aspects of the project delivery all the while maintaining and improving upon Neptune's reputation for safety, quality, reliability and environmental stewardship. Once the project is complete, the Project Manager will have significant opportunities to take on greater project management, engineering, maintenance or operational roles with the company.

The ideal candidate must be an experienced project manager who has provided leadership to large, complex capital projects where he/she has brought discipline and experience in ensuring projects is delivered on-time and on-budget. Experience in an industrial, unionized operating environment will be a significant asset as working closely with the operators to ensure the operations are not disrupted will be critical.

This is an excellent opportunity for a growth oriented individual to join a progressive organization operating in a highly successful and growing industry.
